Can you be sure, without positive indentification, that the photograph on the left is a likeness of Mrs. J. Borden Harriman while that on the right is a picture of Miss Ethel Harriman, a Newport debutante of the past season and certain to be a belle of the coming Washington season? Mrs. Harriman's spirit is as youthful as her face. But the maturity of her brain is attested by her appointment several years ago as the only woman member of the industrial relations commission.

"You have with you the feeble minded," she declared after praising Kansas for its many virtues. "You must get the idea of mental level."

She told an illuminating story of "Becky"—a girl she had been called upon to examine for mental deficiency and whom almost everyone believed to be bad, but normal. She discovered her to have the mental strength of a 7-year-old child.

"You have all over the country, Beckys," she said. "They are a menace to society everywhere."

Illustrative of the boy imbecile, was "Jimmy," a lad whom she had found in a farmyard pumping and pumping, with the tank full and the tub full and himself standing in two feet of water. "You see, there's a great deal of energy there." she concluded.

Another boy, "Billy," was so fond of fire, that the superintendent of a corrective institution with which Mrs. Kite is connected put him in the boiler room where he was perfectly happy, his incendiarism confined to harmless and useful channels.

The speaker pointed out two solutions to the problem. One she called the long, sure way, the other, the short way, for immediate action. By means of the former, the little child of low mentality, is varied for from the beginning in an industrial training school days to a physical and mental examination. The short way provides for institutions for defective women and girls, where the immates are kept until they die.
